

Social justice and the problem of resource inequality

General description of the discipline, content, relevance

The problem of justice is a matter of both our motivation for quality work and our attitude to law-abiding behavior. It determines the possibilities of stable development of the individual, community and societies - up to the sphere of constructive international interactions. This problem is exacerbated by the shortage of resources, which tends to increase. Under what conditions will man, as the main resource of historical development, be able to convert his capabilities into the ability to solve the problem of this deficit in a humanistic justified way? Preserving freedoms, recognizing limitations, integrating noospheric responsibility for actions as an imperative of modern existence and the possibility of the future.

The purpose of the discipline is to form students' abilities:

- to abstract thinking, analysis and synthesis;
- to search, process and analyze information from various sources make informed decisions;
- ability to apply the acquired knowledge in practical situations;
- creatively use modern fundamental theories in the field of social and behavioral sciences.

Importance for the practical using: The resource paradigm is universal, as is the value of justice. Develop the skills to work productively with them - these chance students get while studying this course. These competencies will be useful in research, marketing companies, the public sector, public and international organizations, political and media projects, and more.