

Sociological research of social structures, organizations and management-1.

The discipline is aimed at forming students' abilities in using the sociological approach to analyze the socio-class structure in modern society; identification of features of social structures and inequalities in different historical types of society; formation of scientific ideas about social structure, social stratification, social mobility, channels of social circulation; acquaintance with key methodological approaches to the analysis of social stratification, empirical research and theoretical models of modern class theory, modern scientific ideas about the phenomenon of the middle class, its functions in the social structure; acquaintance with sociological theories of the elite, theories of poverty; formation of skills of use of the received knowledge in practice.