

Propaganda and armed conflict

The aim of the discipline is to form students' knowledge base in propaganda and armed conflicts through historical retrospective and modern practice. This discipline is aimed to develop students' ability in expert evaluation and analysis of propaganda processes in conditions of the armed conflict as well.

The main tasks in studying the credit module «Propaganda and armed conflict» are:

- to determine specifics of the propaganda and to separate it from other communication technologies;
- to highlight the features of historical stages of propaganda development;
- to compare and classify international and non-international armed conflicts;
- to identify different methods of political propaganda;
- to distinguish the linear and non-linear models of communication during propaganda analysis;
- to explore transformation of the propaganda on the current stage;
- to evaluate the role of the media in the armed conflicts;
- to predict the waves of escalation of the armed conflicts in conditions of systematically political propaganda.